

Wood Floor Restoration Buying Guide

Restoring wood floors can significantly improve the appearance and value of a property. Here is a comprehensive buying guide to wood floor restoration in the UK:

1

Assess the condition of your wood floors:

Before you start the restoration process, it's important that you assess the condition of your wood floors. Look for areas that are stained or discoloured, scratched, or worn. This will help you determine the type of restoration services you will require.

4

Determine the cost:

The cost of wood floor restoration will vary depending on the extent of the damage, the size of the area that needs to be restored, and the type of restoration service you choose. Get a quote from your chosen professional before proceeding with the restoration.

2

Research restoration options:

There are several options for restoring wood floors available in the UK, including sanding and refinishing or resurfacing. Research each option to determine which one is best suited for your floors and your budget.

5

Choose a finish:

If you've opted for sanding and refinishing, you'll need to choose a finish for your wood floors. There are several options available, including oil-based finishes, water-based finishes, and polyurethane finishes. Research each option to determine which one is best.

3

Hire a professional:

When it comes to restoring wood floors, it's always best to hire a professional. Look for a company with experience and expertise in wood floor restoration. Read reviews and ask for references before making a decision.

6

Follow aftercare instructions:

Once your wood floors have been restored, it's important that you follow the aftercare instructions provided by the professional. This may include avoiding furniture or foot traffic on the floors for a certain period of time, and using specific cleaning products to maintain the finish.

By following these steps, you can ensure that your wood floors are restored to their former glory and add significant value to your property.

Book your FREE quotation by calling our helpline
0333 880 3664